

Downsizing in comfort

COUPLE APPRECIATE ASHFORD OAKS HOME'S PRIVACY,
PROXIMITY TO GOLF COURSE

Delores and C.K. Lane's younger child was about to leave home to go to college. Their daughter had already graduated and was working in Atlanta. Now it was time for the Lanes to face the prospect of becoming empty-nesters.

For some people, downsizing is a daunting transition. But for the Lanes, it was an exciting adjustment. They looked forward to moving into a new home with fewer rooms and no basement.

As longtime members of the Greenbrier Golf and Country Club, the Lanes had been watching a new subdivision called Ashford Oaks as it slowly grew near the golf course. Builder/developer Jason Justice had carefully laid out the neighborhood to incorporate estate and courtyard or park-side homes.

"We kept watching him develop this neighborhood and we fell in love with his work," said Delores. "He was good to work with. He built a good-quality development and became a friend."
